

A big "Thank you" to Rick Beardsley (Class of 1975) for giving us this painting he did of the Fluttering Duck when he was a student at DePauw in the 70's. In those days, the Duck was a student hangout and coffee house run by Maybelle Hamm.

Some memories from classmates of those times:

"Hard to go back to the library after taking a break at the Duck in the evening".

"A shelter from the storm".

In the Duck, students were encouraged to hang posters, poetry they had written, etc. And according to former students, "Posters [were] mounted over posters, the old ones never taken down".

Others remember some food options from that time. "Sunday evening meals, potluck, just pay what you can." The living units didn't serve Sunday evening meals and students were on their own that night
